

Final Background Paper RT 3.1.

Empowering migrants, their households and communities for improved protection of rights and social development outcomes

as of 2014-04-09

Expected Outcome

The expected outcome of this Roundtable would be a list of possible measures to be taken by governments of both countries of origin and residence and through partnerships with e.g., civil society, private sector actors, employers' and workers' organizations, international organizations, and local authorities, in order to enhance access to social protection mechanisms and social services, including information for migrants on the move, to reduce vulnerabilities of migrants and their families and minimize the social costs of migration.

Introduction¹

Migrant empowerment is built on the twin pillars of rights and opportunity. A legal framework that safeguards migrants' human rights and a policy framework that allows migrants to claim their rights and to access opportunities is the foundation upon which empowerment and positive social development outcomes can be realized. By facilitating access to basic services and opportunities, states recognize the value that migrants bring to their societies and the contribution they make towards their own development. Very often, migrants' individual goals include things, such as better education and health for their families and communities that are fundamental to development. The greater migrants' access to social services, and the more choices they have, the more active they are likely to be as agents of social as well as economic development. Furthermore, migrants' access to basic services including health, education, social and legal protection is one way to ensure that migrants are not excluded from the goals articulated by the international community for the Post-2015 development agenda. There are human, social and economic costs if we ignore or mismanage migration and the costs are particularly high for vulnerable migrants, especially women and children, migrants in transit, irregular and exploited migrants. Opportunities without rights can lead to discrimination against migrants, or even exploitation in the workplace and in other interactions such as renting accommodation, gaining access to public services, and pursuing a normal family and social life. Rights without opportunities can remain abstract, without resulting in concrete improvements to migrants' lives and the lives of their families and communities, thus contributing little to social development outcomes. For example, migrants may have the right to work, but if diversity is not encouraged in the workplace, the job opportunity may never present itself. Both elements of empowerment are essential.

When constructing a policy framework for empowerment of migrants built on rights and opportunity, a robust legal framework made operational and accessible through the rule of law is essential to protect migrants' human rights, labour rights and property rights. Awareness or existence of rights does not necessarily lead to the ability to exercise those rights. Obstacles to accessing rights and opportunities should also be identified. How migrants are perceived and framed within national legislation is key to how they will be able to access both rights and opportunities. Without legal access to social services e.g., health, education and social security schemes, migrants will not have the means necessary to attain their rights and social development outcomes. For example, birth registration, access to official identification documents, etc. are the building blocks for empowerment for prospective and actual migrants, and can help to eliminate gendered migration policies that may discriminate against women or children or conversely make them more vulnerable to exploitation.

Beyond the foundation in law, policies to promote the empowerment of migrants, their households and communities should focus on three major sources of capability, which can promote migrants' ability to seize their rights and pursue opportunities that will lead to inclusive human, social and economic development. These three sources of capability are: information, voice and connection.

Empowerment is a complex phenomenon. It must work in the two dimensions of rights and opportunity, across at least three sources of capability, and involve multiple actors: migrants, their families, their communities of origin and destination, local and national authorities, employers, trade unions and civil society structures at the very least. But not every initiative needs to involve all of these at once. There is a wide array of successful programmes and projects for empowerment, which can be adapted to and adopted in different circumstances in countries and communities of origin and destination. Some of these projects and programmes are described in the Annex to this paper.

Information

Access to information is a key resource for migrants in many ways. It enables them to know what their rights are as migrants, and how they can pursue enforcement and redress if their rights are violated. Government policies can promote migrants' access to these rights; hence appropriate training and capacity building of officials are an essential element of migrant empowerment. Have state officials been trained to protect and empower migrants; and have steps been taken to monitor the effectiveness both of training and implementation of policies aimed at empowering and protecting migrants, including combatting xenophobia? Are there independent bodies that migrants can turn to for redress without fear of discrimination? Have impact assessments been done on respective policies so that unforeseen barriers that impede access to services can be removed? Migrants also need information about legal channels of migration (and the real risks and costs of irregular migration), and their obligations as residents of a particular country. Some countries also provide information on how to change migration status, for example from temporary to permanent status, student to worker, or from an irregular to a regular status through a regularization procedure. Appropriately delivered information can acquaint migrants and their families with programmes that can ease their integration into their communities of destination and make their continuing ties with their communities of origin more productive. Countries of destination tend to have extensive programmes to promote integration and social inclusion. Conversely, countries of origin often have established departments or ministries devoted to providing information for, and maintaining relations with, their diaspora. Irregular migrants who return to their countries of origin also need good information about economic opportunities in their home countries, and other options for reintegration.² Information can play a preventive role, for example, warning potential victims of the dangers of trafficking; or informing of the risks faced along the journey, such as sea or desert crossings. The inclusion of practical alternatives to hazardous migration journeys in these information campaigns significantly enhances their effectiveness.

Migrants and members of their families who are well-informed about opportunities for education and have access to these institutions (from pre-kindergarten and public school choices to scholarship opportunities for higher education), financial opportunities (e.g., through information about financial literacy programmes, savings products, investment programmes, or websites that show the costs of sending remittances through different vehicles) or health resources are better prepared to contribute to the development of both origin and destination countries. Requirements and opportunities differ from location to location. For example, are migrants able or indeed obligated to send their children to school, even if they are undocumented? Up until what age?

How have institutional gaps been bridged in countries of origin and destination? How has outreach to migrant communities been implemented to facilitate the effective delivery of social and financial services? For example, are migrants able to open payment accounts? Are requirements for qualifying for e.g. loans or credit, obstacles for migrants even if they are well-informed? How can a balance be found between increasingly stringent security directives for banking services and the benefits that an accessible banking system can bring to migrants?

Another question concerns health: what kinds of health services can they access? There is often a disconnect between national legislation and what happens in practice. This can be because of lack of information to service providers about migrants' entitlements or misinformation that prevents migrants (particularly those in irregular situations that fear police detection) from seeking help. Some countries offer free hospital care and health care, not based on nationality or passport, but by being legally resident for more than six months.³ Others offer insurance schemes for migrants that they can pay into, irrespective of migrant status.⁴ Yet others offer access to basic health care and emergency services to all migrants irrespective of status, for example: Belgium, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Poland, Spain and Sweden.⁵

⁵ FRA – European Agency for Fundamental Rights, Migrants in an irregular situation: access to healthcare in 10 European Union Member States <http://europa.eu/> for more information

Employers, landlords, educators, health care workers, civil servants and others who interact with migrants on a routine basis also need good information about the rights of migrants in different legal statuses, as well as their obligations toward migrants – for example, non-discrimination requirements, which is why capacity building of frontline staff or others who may come into regular contact with migrants, is a necessary policy measure and should be well resourced. Information is also critically important for the authorities of migrant-destination jurisdictions, at both national and local levels: how many migrants live in their jurisdictions; what languages do they speak; what skills do they have; what is their age profile, health status, educational background? Without this kind of information, it is difficult for governments to understand the needs of migrants, the kinds of demands they will place on public services, or their potential to contribute to the development of the community – and therefore difficult for governments to contribute to empowering migrants. Governments and local authorities also need information on how to assist those seeking access to their rights (e.g., birth registration to avoid statelessness is one example) get the help they need. Information outreach must be coupled with policies and procedures that help migrants, once they have the information, access the services provided by the government without fear of rejection, discrimination or recrimination from public officials.

Governments of migrants' countries and communities of origin also depend on accurate information to locate their citizens abroad, to whom they owe consular protection and at least some minimal services such as provision of documents and registration of births, deaths and marriages.

These governments have an interest in knowing the location and characteristics of diaspora populations (emigrants and their descendants) if they hope to enlist the aid of the diaspora in national development. In some cases, governments develop good relations with the diaspora by running information programs to promote the well-being of the migrant community, such as the “health windows” (Ventanas de Salud⁶) run out of Mexican consulates in the United States to provide information on health topics, counseling and referrals to health services accessible to migrants and their families.

Migrants, especially migrants to developed countries, live in a context of information overload. Many migrants rely heavily on their own community as a source and filter of information. Peer networks are extremely efficient disseminators, but do not always have access to correct or timely information. Partnerships among migrant organizations and community leaders, local and national governments, private sector businesses, employers' associations and trade unions, and civil society organizations have great potential to marry the provision of solid information with effective networking to provide migrants with empowering information. It is extremely important to ensure that such information be provided in languages that migrants understand, or that translation services are made available. In some states, programmes support trade unions outreach to empower migrant workers, providing them with better services and information.

Voice

An effective public voice is both a vehicle and a signal of migrants' empowerment. It allows them to speak out in defence of their rights, to advocate for their needs, and to articulate their actual and potential contributions to their countries and communities of origin and destination. Migrants' voices may be most effective in combination with the voices of other advocates for human rights and equal opportunity. For example, the movement led by migrant domestic workers which led to the passage of the ILO Domestic Workers Convention No. 189⁷ was supported by allies from human rights organizations, labour unions, and other advocates from both source and destination countries.

A public voice can also help to erode racist and xenophobic attitudes in countries of destination: fear of the unknown contributes to such attitudes, and promoting migrants' voices in different public and private spheres can increase familiarity with the cultures and experiences of migrant. It should be recognized, however, that migrants' voices – even those who come from the same country – are diverse. No one should expect a single voice or message to emerge.

Migrants have different experiences depending on their skills level and legal status. Highly skilled migrants recruited within their professional network move easily across borders, normally retaining full social and economic entitlements and in many cases portability of pensions. On the other hand, low-skilled migrants are more likely to end up in irregular situations in the absence of adequate regular migration channels, trafficked or exploited – and the risk is greater for women and children. They are also less likely to be able to advocate for themselves. Are children able to participate meaningfully in decisions that affect them or their parents, do they have a right to be heard in proceedings concerning their parents' admission, residence and expulsion and can they appeal their parents' deportation to ensure that all decisions are in their best interest.⁸ How can state and civil society actors collaborate to ensure that all migrants, including irregular migrants, have a voice?

While the voice of a single individual can be powerful, the most effective expression of migrants' aspirations, needs, and talents is likely to emerge through the empowerment of community groups and their participation in civic life. They should make sure that a diverse range of spokespersons from migrant communities (who represent the entire community, including women, youth, and the full spectrum of social groups) are invited to take part in public discussions about issues that concern them and the communities of which they are a part. In this way, the authorities not only empower migrants but demonstrate that migrants are recognized as stakeholders in the larger community. One example of this is Greece's Migration Integration Councils which promote active participation of migrants in local decision-making.⁹ These councils, which are entrusted with a consultative role on issues pertaining to migrant integration in local communities, promote active participation of migrants in local decision-making and contribute significantly to promoting the integration of migrants and to strengthening social cohesion. Civil society also has a part to play in including migrants in the broad spectrum of civic engagement.

An important element of promoting migrants' voices is the opportunity for migrants to share their cultures with the larger community. Both the authorities at destination and civil society organisations can support museums or exhibits, performing arts spaces and cultural centres which give expression to migrants' heritage and provide a forum for them to tell their stories for the general public to get a better – as well as the larger story - of appreciation for the role that migration has played in socio-economic development. In many cases, the governments of countries of origin play an important part in supporting and showcasing the culture of the countries of origin. Governments in the countries of migrant origin have also, in many cases, given migrant communities a voice on the public issues that concern them by establishing advisory councils composed of migrant representatives. A few governments include representatives of migrants in the national legislature. One of the most definitive actions that give a political voice is permitting nationals, who live abroad, to vote. Some states also permit dual citizenship. Expressing their voice may not come naturally to migrants, especially for those who have left a setting in which public debate is discouraged or even punished, in a place where interest groups of various kinds are expected to insert themselves into the competition of ideas and demands. As a result of cultural conventions, it may be especially challenging to persuade women and young people to enter into public debate. In addressing this challenge, civil society organizations, from within the migrant community and external to it, have an important role to play, especially in dealing with sensitive cultural issues or when challenging gender norms.

An increasing number of migrants are unaccompanied minors or minors separated from their families. Without a voice advocating for the provision to restore family links or appropriate care arrangements, they are at high risk of abuse and exploitation. Their rights may be violated along the migratory trail, and their prospects for a secure and productive future are often dim without direct support from national authorities and civil society actors.

Education programmes for migrants, particularly for literacy and language trainings are essential elements for empowerment of migrants' voices. Many also offer access to higher education under the same conditions and prerequisites as nationals. A prerequisite for exercising voice is the ability to communicate to others in a common language. Investment in learning the language of the destination country is productive both for migrants and the societies they join, and should be a priority for empowerment policy frameworks. Some states provide free access to language learning, others offer it for a small fee. Many local authorities in destination countries provide language training to facilitate migrants' entry into the labour market and to work in professions that fit their educational background.¹⁰ Being able to articulate concerns in a common language is a first step for migrants wishing to participate in labour unions or to advocate for labour rights. Some receiving states also provide free language support to ensure that migrant children retain and develop their mother tongue as well as learning the language of the host country.

Connection

Migrants commonly act as a bridge connecting their countries of origin and destination, but it is often challenging for them to maintain ties with the relatives and communities they have left behind. Although separation from family and friends may be, in the migrant's judgment, the best among limited options, policy makers can work to expand those options by opening pathways for family reunification in certain circumstance, e.g. where migrants are well established and able to support their families; for doctoral students or for migrants in certain skills categories where spouses also can qualify for work permits. How can barriers to social and economic integration be removed? How can countries of destination facilitate entrance to the labour market or access to financial credit for migrants? By gathering evidence of what works, by finding ways to reduce the social costs of migration, countries can support the empowerment of their citizens at home and as migrants.

Remittances sent by migrants to countries of origin which often promote access to health and education for family members left behind provide a concrete example of how maintaining connections between a migrant and his/her country of origin directly impacts on the socio-economic development of a particular family unit or community.¹¹ For many, remittances have enabled family members to access opportunities for longer term socio-economic development,¹² not forgetting that special attention should be paid to children left behind. There are psycho-social implications for a child who may feel abandoned, possibly impacting educational outcomes.¹³ At the same time, depending on the socio-economic situation of the family, having parents who are labour migrants can be empowering for children in public schools, but the same situation can be stigmatizing for children in private schools, How have policy makers in countries of origin worked with local communities to reduce stigma for family members and children left behind or other social costs of migration?

Financial remittances are de facto a form of social protection as it diversifies risks and enhances livelihoods. However, the discrepancies in requirements for ID documents for banks/financial service industries in countries of origin and destination can exclude many migrants from using formal channels. Some origin states have negotiated with host states to recognize identification cards with high security features in order to facilitate migrants' access to services, including banking regardless of migration status.¹⁴ Circular migration, facilitated by multiple re-entry visas and flexible residency requirements on the path to permanent residency, could make it easier for migrant families to maintain their connections across borders. Governments of origin and destination countries should make telecommunications as cheap and easy as current technology allows. Initiatives that empower migrants to direct their remittances towards particular purposes, such as school fees, home mortgages or medical insurance, have proven successful and could be widely replicated. The private sector (banks) can play an important role by providing smart services “packages” specifically designed for migrants and diaspora communities.

States and sub-national authorities in destination countries can promote the empowerment of migrants by creating structures to connect migrants to government at all levels. In countries of destination, a national “Office of New Residents” as well as similar offices at the local level can work with civil society organizations to facilitate access for migrants to the services that are available to them (which are likely to differ for permanent residents, temporary migrants, and irregular migrants), to inform them of their rights, introduce them to opportunities and increase the mutual familiarity between and among migrants of different origins and the native-born.

Empowerment is closely linked to the associative life of migrants, and their ability to organize themselves. Home Town Associations, alumni associations, professional associations and other kinds of migrant organizations, along with social media (Skype, Facebook etc.) link migrants in destination countries to their communities of origin, in a context of joint decision-making about the needs and priorities of the community of origin. In some cases, governments of origin countries have worked with these organizations to scale up and replicate their activities.

How can states empower migrants in their midst, and how can countries of origin help to empower their emigrants and diaspora groups? What partnerships are likely to do the most to promote this agenda and support constructive actions on the parts of migrants and diaspora groups? Many regional and international structures, including prominently the Global Forum on Migration and Development, have created opportunities for countries to learn from each other’s experiences, and share information.

Connections among migrants, diasporas, their communities and their countries of origin are proving that “transnational community” is not just an academic phrase, but a living reality. These communities not only send economic and social remittances across borders, but they help to break the isolation of developing countries from global networks of knowledge, trade, technology and investment. This isolation is a cause, and one of the most damaging consequences, of lack of development. In some countries state and/or local authorities are working to promote connections between countries of origin and destination through twinning or return of skilled professionals.

The power of purely personal connections should not be underestimated, especially its power to erode racist and xenophobic attitudes. Opinion surveys consistently show that people who express vehement anti-migration or anti-migrant views will nonetheless speak very positively about migrants whom they know personally. The policy implications of such findings are that residential and educational segregation should be vigorously opposed, and interaction between migrants and the native born promoted, particularly through elements of everyday life such as music, sport, food and education which can break down the “otherness” of the migrant.

Conclusion

Empowerment encompasses the ability to make informed and meaningful choices about one’s life (including the choice to migrate). It is founded on the protection and promotion of human rights, and depends on opening opportunities through which migrants can pursue their goals as individuals and as members of families and multiple communities. Very often, migrants’ individual goals include better education and health for their families and communities that are fundamental to development. The greater migrants’ access to rights, and the more choices they have, the more active they are likely to be as agents of social as well as economic development. As a result of migrants’ transnational connections, a virtuous circle is becoming evident – empowered migrants empower others. When migrants can exercise their rights and take advantage of opportunities, they share assets, create associations, transfer their knowledge and skills to their countries of origin, and provide innumerable examples of positive action. The dynamics of these interactions, through access to information, voice and connection, is increasingly well understood. The policy challenge now is to move strongly to implementation of practical measures of empowerment, based on the twin pillars of rights and opportunities.

Links to other GFMD Roundtables

The topic of empowerment is implicit in all the roundtables, but RT 3.1 explores tools that enhance empowerment of migrants. Within a rule of law framework that safeguards migrants’ rights, states can evolve policies that promote the active empowerment of migrants. Migrants’ access to information, their ability to advocate for themselves and their opportunity to act will enable their contribution to development. By focusing on different dimensions of empowerment, this roundtable identifies methods and practices that can feed into the policy discussions addressed in other roundtable discussions, such as the post-2015 UN development agenda, diaspora entrepreneurship and skills matching. As recruitment is a focus of RT 2.1 on Enhancing the development impacts of labour migration and circular mobility through more systematic labour market and skills matching, there will be a degree of overlap with RT 3.1. However, RT 3.1 does not focus on skills matching or labour market participation, but on the social dimension of migration, taking into account the gender, age, and skills of the person concerned. RT 3.1 looks broadly at how empowerment contributes to migrants’ agency as individuals, family members and contributing members of society, while in RT 3.2, the discussion focuses on how migrants, as development actors, can contribute to positive development outcomes specifically in the areas of health and education in countries of origin.

Guiding Questions for RT 3.1

- a) How have governments and other relevant stakeholders extended social services, including health and education, to migrants?
- b) What are the barriers towards migrants, especially women and children, being able to access the information they need pertaining to their rights? How can states, civil society and other stakeholder collaborate to ensure that migrants have the information they need and access to the opportunities offered?
- c) How can migrants be supported to have a voice on issues that affect their social and economic wellbeing? What policy and legal frameworks are needed to ensure that migrants (including children) are able to advocate for themselves and for members of their community? How have states worked with migrant associations and/or other actors to address the public perceptions of migrants?
- d) How can connections between family members and between country of origin and destination be acknowledged and enhanced? How can states minimize the social cost of labour migration (families left behind) taking into account migrants' needs for protection and empowerment irrespective of age, gender, skills/income level or migrant status?

Annex I to 3.1.

This Annex contains descriptions and references to examples of relevant frameworks, policies, programmes, projects and other experiences in relation to the issues raised in the policy part of the Background paper. This second part of the Background paper aims to form the basis of an evolving catalogue of policies and practices with a view to be stored and displayed on the GFMD Pfp website in a Policy and Practice Database.

Title: Prevention strategy on the risks of undocumented migration
Country: El Salvador	Partner(s)/Funder(s): Universidad Centroamericana José Simeón Cañas, UNFPA Country Office, Ford Foundation.
Thematic Area(s): Strategies for addressing irregular migration and enabling regular migration	Tags: Addressing irregular migration; Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants; Return and reintegration
Summary: In order to support strategies related to emigration and its implications on adolescents and youth, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs developed a communication strategy on the prevention of the risks and health care, with emphasis on Sexual Reproductive Health in irregular migratory processes among adolescents and young people. The communication strategy was based on a qualitative study that inquired about the context and sociocultural factors influencing the undocumented migration of Salvadorans to USA, as well as the perceptions of these young people about the risks of this type of migration. The study focused on young people ages 15 to 24 who were potential migrants or migrant returnees. The evidence generated by the study included videos from key informants and other didactic materials. In this context, an inter-institutional migration working group (Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Health, MINSAL, Youth Units at the Ombudsman's Office, UNFPA and the Ministry of education, MINED) was established with two objectives: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a) To coordinate at the central level as well as at the local level, the implementation of the communication strategy about prevention of the risks of irregular migration. b) Mainstreaming the immigration issue in the programmes and projects of the participating institutions by promoting informed decision-making as a means to discourage irregular migration. It was planned that the communication strategy would be implemented at the national level, with special emphasis in the municipalities of greater expulsion of young population, as well as the community of Salvadorans who live in the United States. At this moment, the strategy has been implemented in a pilot municipality, with a broad participation of local actors: City Council, schools, Ministry of Health, and youth networks. Replica has been made in two other municipalities.

Title: Reproductive Health: A Right Without Borders
Countries: Latin America and the Caribbean region	Partner(s): Population Division of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (CELADE/ECLAC); Ibero-American General Secretariat (SEGIB); Central American health Integration System (SISCA); National Institute of Public Health of Mexico (INSP); International Organization for Migration (IOM); Inter-American Institute of Human Rights (IIDH); Technical Cooperation Offices of the Spanish Agency for International Development Cooperation TCO AECID)
Thematic Area(s): Strategies for minimizing costs/maximizing human development	Tags: Capacity Building; Migration and health; Millennium Development Goals and the Post-2015 Development Agenda
Summary: In Latin America and the Caribbean, with sponsorship from the Spanish Agency for International Development Cooperation, UNPFA worked with Governments and strategic partners in the region on the initiative for sexual and reproductive health care for migrant youths and women, which is aimed at placing the themes of sexual and reproductive health care, including HIV/AIDS, and sexual violence affecting migrant youth and women on the public agenda as a right that goes beyond borders. The work promotes binational and cross-sectoral work between Argentina and Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Colombia and Ecuador, Costa Rica and Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala and Mexico, and Haiti and the Dominican Republic in order to improve migrants' access to sexual and reproductive health-care services and to strengthen programmes for the prevention of sexually transmitted infections/HIV and AIDS and gender-based violence. Regional and binational studies on the sexual and reproductive health of the migrant population in highly vulnerable border areas helped to identify needs and obstacles to progress in this area, and helped to inform the development of strategies to promote the human rights of migrant youth and women and improve their access to sexual and reproductive health services. The creation of binational commissions as coordination mechanisms at borders stimulated the exchange of information, the identification of intervention zones, the preparation of policies, the integration of associations of civil society and Governments and the establishment of care services. With the participation of governmental and civil society institutions, border and cross-border cooperation networks for the design of health policies, the development and implementation of sexual and reproductive health-care strategies and the monitoring and evaluation of policies have been strengthened.

Title: UNICEF-Atikha project
Country: Philippines	Partner(s): UNICEF Philippines and non-governmental and faith based organizations, including the Atikha Overseas Workers and Communities Initiative (Atikha) and the Episcopal Commission of the Pastoral Care of Migrants and Itinerant People (ECMI)
Thematic Area(s): Empowerment; children left behind; Strategies for minimizing costs/maximizing human development	Tags: Capacity building; Family and children
Summary: The NGO Atikha Overseas Workers and Communities Initiative offers livelihood training and economic opportunities to help children and families left behind to become more self-reliant. Overall, the goal is to teach girls and boys the skills and knowledge needed to improve their talents and capabilities, as well as understand their rights and responsibilities as youth and citizens. Atikha developed a manual that serves as a guide for primary and secondary school teachers to integrate migration issues into lesson plans and school activities. It sensitizes boys and girls to the sacrifices of their migrant parents, to the values of education and savings and to the importance of maintaining good communication within the family. An assessment of the initiative revealed that it enhances participants' responsibility towards savings, increases gender sensitivity and their entrepreneurial disposition, as well as their interest in education. It also increases their recognition of their parents' decision to migrate and the importance of communicating with them on a regular basis. The Department of Education included Atikha's modules in the school curriculum in three regions with large populations of children and families left behind, and the good results shown by preliminary evaluations and informal assessments suggest that the initiative will eventually be scaled up.

Country: Switzerland	Partner(s): civil society, migrants
Thematic Area(s): Rights of migrants	Tags: Discrimination and xenophobia; Protection, empowerment and the rights of migrants; social cohesion and integration.
Summary: In order to fight against the negative perceptions of migrants in Switzerland, the Federal office for migration (FOM) has developed training material for schools on different themes related to migration. Due to the interest of teachers and schools, the FOM has then developed a series of workshops on selected topics to be presented in schools. Recently, the FOM in cooperation with the Swiss refugee council (OSAR, SFH) developed a workshop which foresees the participation of migrants. It has been noted that raising awareness in schools had positive effects on the perception of families and the local population.

Thematic Area(s): Rights of migrants	Tags: Protection, Empowerment and rights of migrants,
Summary: Since 2009, the U.S. Department of Labor's (DOL) Wage and Hour Division (WHD) has hired more than 300 new investigators, bringing the Division's total to more than 1,000 investigators. Additionally, in 2011 WHD opened 13 new offices and upgraded several others across the country. More than 700 WHD investigators speak at least one language other than English, including 500 investigators who speak Spanish. Our multilingual employees speak nearly 50 languages, including Creole, Spanish, Tagalog, Thai, and Vietnamese. To further strengthen channels of communication between DOL and the public, WHD contracted with an interpreter service line with a capacity of more than 170 languages via a toll free telephone number. WHD also offers in-person interpretation services for special circumstances. To achieve a more ongoing presence in communities with at-risk workers, the Division has hired new Community Outreach and Resource Planning Specialists to work in several WHD District Offices. WHD also released a series of educational "Know Your Rights" videos to inform workers of their rights and to provide information on how to file a complaint with WHD. They are distributed to workers' rights centers, consulates, career centers, and other stakeholders and are available in English and Spanish on the WHD website.

Thematic Area(s): Rights of migrants	Tags: Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants; Migration and health
Summary: DOL's Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) works to assure safe and healthful working conditions for all workers in the United States and its Territories, regardless of immigration status, by setting and enforcing standards and providing training, outreach, education and compliance assistance. OSHA requires employers to present information about workers' rights and safety and health training materials and instructions in a language that their workers can understand to make certain that all workers understand the workplace hazards they face and that they know their rights. OSHA also administers and enforces whistleblower protection statutes that protect workers who speak out to report perceived violations of the law. In addition, OSHA continues to implement a robust outreach strategy to collaborate with community- and faith-based organizations, unions, employers, and many other nonprofit organizations at the local, regional, and national levels. OSHA recently re-launched its Spanish-language home page and provides OSHA publications in a wide variety of languages including Spanish, Vietnamese and Polish. Approximately 350 of OSHA's staff speaks at least one other language than English.

The Blue Campaign serves as the unified voice for DHS' efforts to combat human trafficking. The components of DHS combat human trafficking through a variety of programs and policies that enhance the Department's important role to help identify, secure and screen victims, investigate human trafficking cases and provide immigration relief to foreign-born victims who do not have legal status in the United States. The Blue Campaign works in collaboration with law enforcement, government, non-governmental and private organizations, to protect the basic right of freedom and to bring those who exploit human lives to justice. The public awareness element of the Blue Campaign includes a number of resources and awareness materials designed to raise the ability of these different communities and the general public to identify and report cases of human trafficking. The public awareness materials include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ Human Trafficking Awareness Posters in multiple languages ○ Public Service Announcements in English and Spanish ○ Newspaper campaigns with TIP awareness advertisements appearing in foreign

language and ethnic newspapers in 25 cities with a Homeland Security Investigations presence. The advertisement appeared in Spanish, Korean, Chinese and Thai language newspapers, as well as several English language papers whose target audiences include Haitian, Indian, Filipino and Asian-Pacific Islander communities. The human trafficking advertisement ran in 64 different newspapers. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ “Tear” cards, “shoe” cards, and posters targeting potential victims of human trafficking produced by U.S. Customs and Border Patrol that connect victims to crisis support and victim assistance services for trafficking victims. CBP Officers distribute the tear cards to at- risk individuals at ports of entry. Posters containing information about human trafficking are displayed at ports of entry as well. Shoe cards containing the 24-hour hotline to the National Human Trafficking Resource Center (NHTRC) are distributed through grassroots methods via victim service providers and faith-based organizations. These tear cards are available in English, Spanish, Chinese, Russian, French, Korean, Thai, Vietnamese, and Indonesian – with shoe cards also currently available in English, Spanish and Korean. ○ Pocket-cards in 17 different languages to highlight the indicators of trafficking ○ Informational pamphlets on the role of DHS and Law Enforcement and the DHS victim-centered approach to investigating cases of human trafficking ○ Brochures on the immigration relief available to TIP victims ○ Public awareness campaigns targeting potential trafficking victims including the “Hidden In Plain Sight” campaign and the “No Te Engañes”/“Don’t be Fooled”. “Hidden In Plain Sight” has reached fourteen U.S. cities and is available in eight languages; No Te Engañes has aired in Mexico, Guatemala and El Salvador and includes four different public service announcements as well as two radio segments. ○ Online training resources for law enforcement and other stakeholders.

Title: Integrating Migrant Worker Resource Centres into Employment Service Centres in Vietnam
Country: Viet Nam	Partner(s): Department of Overseas Labour, Ministry of Labour, Invalids and Social Affairs, International Labour Organization, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Australia
Thematic Area(s): Labour migration and mobility; Rights of migrants	Tags: Enabling regular migration; Low and semi-skilled migration; Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants service centres run by the provincial department of labour since 2011. This model of an integrated service offers ample opportunity for scale and sustainability. It is estimated that 20% of job seekers that visit the employment service centers are interested in working outside of the country. In addition to the typical drop-in and outreach service, this model also allows for potential migrants to be reached through job fairs. Counseling is provided through outreach activities, online and over the phone. Information is also disseminated through broadcasts on local radio and television, and through seminars on safe migration in schools and vocational training centres.
Summary: In Vietnam, Migrant Worker Resource Centres (MRCs) have been established in the employment

The MRCs are implemented in collaboration with the Department of Labour in five provinces in Vietnam. The ILO provides technical and financial support to the MRCs through the GMS TRIANGLE project.

The project has organized training for provincial authorities and staff of the MRCs on the relevant laws related to the sending of workers abroad, and on the delivery of support services. The project has also developed an MRC Operations Manual, a communications plan and other resources, to provide more guidance to staff of the MRCs in the running the centres, and reporting the achievements. Through monitoring missions, the project and the Department of Overseas Labour provide additional coaching to staff of the local department and MRC staff.

Thematic Area(s): Rights of migrants; Strategies for minimizing costs/maximizing human development	Tags: Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants

Summary:

This unique initiative has documented and analysed the many forms taken by the mobility of children and young people in West and Central Africa, based on the key tenet that mobility of children goes both with risks and vulnerabilities as well as opportunities and personal development. Movement per se does not increase the vulnerability of children and youths, it is the conditions under which they move that do so. Movement has negative impacts when children lack protection. The concept of 'protective accompaniment of children' has emerged as a key tool in this context, with the following key elements: unaccompanied migrant children should be seen not only as victims, but also as agents in their own rights; fulfilling their right to human development should be seen as integral part of their protection; and both families and communities need to be more involved in the protection of these children in order to enhance the continuity of the protective environment.

Title: Adult Migrant English Program
Country: Australia	Partner(s):
Thematic Area(s): Strategies for minimizing costs/maximizing human development	Tags: Capacity building; Migration and education; Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants; Social cohesion and integration
Summary: The Australian Government's Adult Migrant English Program (AMEP) provides eligible new migrants and humanitarian entrants with up to 510 hours of free English language tuition to assist with their settlement in Australia. Humanitarian entrants with limited prior education or difficult pre-migration experiences, such as torture or trauma, are also able to access additional English language tuition under the AMEP's Special Preparatory Program. Some individuals are also able to participate in the AMEP Settlement Language Pathways to Employment and Training program which helps migrants to learn English while gaining familiarity with Australian workplace language, culture and practices. The AMEP is delivered at over 250 locations across Australia, as well as via distance and online learning. Students with children under school age are able to access free childcare services, to facilitate their attendance at AMEP classes. Specialist AMEP counsellors help to guide and support students during their time in the program.

Title: Seasonal Worker Program
Country: Australia	Partner(s): Pacific Island countries and Timor-Leste
Thematic Area(s): Labour migration and mobility; Remittances; Strategies for minimizing costs/maximizing human development	Tags: Migration management; Private sector and public-private partnerships; Capacity building; Temporary and circular migration
Summary: The Seasonal Worker Program aims to contribute to Pacific islands' and Timor-Leste's economic development objectives while assisting Australian employers who cannot source local labour. Citizens of Kiribati, Nauru, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Timor Leste, Tonga, Tuvalu and Vanuatu are able to participate in the programme. The Department of Employment is the lead Australian agency and responsible for the implementation and management of the programme. The Department of Immigration and Border Protection supports the programme by managing the visa application process, ensuring visa compliance is monitored and by providing assistance with training participating countries on Australia's visa requirements. The programme is available to the horticulture sector and, on a trial basis, the accommodation, aquaculture, cane and cotton sectors in selected regions. It is a demand driven programme and take up is dependent on Australian employers' demonstrated demand for labour, employer choice to use the programme and employer choice as to which country they recruit from. Employers wishing to participate in the programme need to become approved sponsors and are subject to sponsor obligations under the Migration Act 1958, which provides robust worker protection to seasonal workers similar to those in other temporary work visa programmes. Seasonal workers can be employed from 14 weeks to six months, with a maximum stay of seven months in Australia in any 12 month period, and may return for following seasons. The programme promotes opportunities for employment to facilitate inclusive participation, including through the active promotion of participation by women and underrepresented groups. Seasonal workers are involved with local communities in Australia through participation in cultural, religious, sporting and other events. Developing skills is an important feature of the Seasonal Worker Program. The "Add-on Skills Training" component of the Seasonal Worker Program allows seasonal workers to access basic training opportunities to increase their performance capability both in Australia and in their home country. Seasonal workers have an opportunity to receive formal qualifications under the Australian Quality Training Framework at no cost to seasonal workers or their employers. The Seasonal Worker Program provides economic assistance to partner countries by increasing welfare to households and communities through remittances. By participating in the programme, workers can provide support to their family and community, assisting with educational development and long-term job creation.

Title: Migrant Integration Councils
Country: Greece	Partner(s):
Thematic Area(s): Governance of migration and coordination of dialogue	Tags: Legal frameworks on migration
Summary: Greek local government structures were re-organised in 2010 through the Programme “Kallikratis”. As a result, an important part of the everyday implementation of migration and integration policy was transferred to the newly-formed Decentralised Administration structures. In the field of integration policy, Programme “Kallikratis”, introduced the setting up of Migrant Integration Councils (MICs) in the 325 Municipalities of the country. Migrant Integration Councils are entrusted with a consultative role on issues pertaining to migrant integration in local communities. Specifically, the role of Migrant Integration Councils is to identify integration problems faced by TCNs legally residing in the Municipalities and submit recommendations and proposals to the municipal councils concerning the development of local actions for the smooth integration of TCNs in local societies. Taking into account that the members of Migrant Integration Councils include not only municipal councillors but also representatives from the local immigrants’ communities, it is evident that the Migrant Integration Councils ensure interaction between host society and TCNs and encourage immediate local participation of all residents. Since the latest local government elections in 2010 and until July 2013, 220 MIC’s had been set up, some of which are more active than others. The European Integration Fund has funded the following actions for the support of Migrant Integration Councils: two actions on the technical support of Migrant Integration Councils, a training program for MIC members regarding the operation of the Councils and the networking between MIC members, and an action concerning the development of a cooperation network among member states at the local level.

Title: Swedish Language Training for Professionals (SFX)
Country: Sweden	Partner(s): Municipalities in Sweden
Thematic Area(s): Labour migration and mobility; Strategies for minimizing costs/maximizing human development	Tags: Labour-market matching; Migration and education; Skilled migration; Social cohesion and integration
Summary: This language training programme improves the possibilities of migrants to enter the labour market and to work in profession that fit their educational background. In many parts of Sweden, language courses, or so called SFX educations – “Swedish for professionals” are organised at municipality level aiming at migrants with different professional backgrounds. The teaching of the Swedish language focuses on the development of the professional language. The training also provides the opportunity to learn how the job market is functioning and how one’s own profession is exercised in Sweden. If possible, internships are included in the programme and add-on trainings in college or high school may be provided. The overall aim of sfx is to shorten the time to get a job or to build up one’s own company. Examples of sfx training are Swedish for bus drivers, business owners, craftsmen, engineers, truck drivers, medical professionals, staff and IT specialists, and others. The sfx-courses are free of charge for participants and paid by the home municipality. Due to a recent report from Stockholm municipality 48% of those that participated in sfx are working in their profession, 19% in another area and 13% are studying at university or in adult.

Title: New cantonal integration programmes 2014-2017
Country: Switzerland	Partner(s): Confederation, Cantons, local authorities, non-governmental organizations, civil society organisations, migrants associations
Thematic Area(s): Rights of migrants; Governance of migration and coordination of dialogue	Tags: Civil society; Discrimination and xenophobia; Labour-market matching; Livelihoods and job creation; Migration and education; Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants; Social cohesion and integration
Summary: In order to improve and encourage integration of regular migrants, the Swiss confederation together with the Swiss cantons implemented a common strategy for integration. The main objectives are the reinforcement of social cohesion, the encouragement of mutual respect and tolerance, and the participation of foreigners in the Swiss society. The strategy is based on three pillars 1) Information and counselling; 1) Education and employment; 3) Mutual understanding and social integration. For each of these pillars, the confederation and the cantons have identified 8 key areas where measures were needed to reinforce integration: such as for instance a comprehensive information scheme for migrants recently arrived in Switzerland, measures to improve language skills, access to school and training, intercultural interpreting, integration in the labour market among others. For each of these areas, the Confederation and the Cantons have agreed upon binding strategic objectives. On this common strategic vision, each Canton has elaborated a cantonal integration program (CIP) for the period 2014-2017 in which all specific integration support measures are bundled together. The programmes are jointly financed by the Confederation and the Cantons. In the strategy the Confederation and the Cantons recognize that the protection against discrimination is an essential condition for the integration of migrants in Switzerland and specific measures such as counselling of migrants and relevant institutions will be implemented.

Title: e-discussion on Youth Migration, Equity & Inequalities in the Post-2015 Development Agenda

Country: N/A

Partner(s): UNICEF KNOMAD/World Bank

Thematic Area(s): Civil society and the private sector; Governance of migration and coordination of dialogue

Tags: Millennium Development Goals and the Post-2015 Development Agenda

Summary:

With the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) set to expire in 2015 the deadline is rapidly approaching to agree a new development framework post-2015. Migration was not included in the MDGs, however, the second High-Level Dialogue on Migration and Development, which took place at the United Nations in New York on 3-4 October 2013, reached consensus on the need to consider how to include migration in the post-2015 development agenda.

In support of this, the online discussion provided an open, public forum to look at the impact of migration on adolescents and youth, (individuals aged 10-24, according to United Nations definitions), and how to reduce the negative impacts and increase the positive benefits for adolescents and youth and countries of origin and destination alike, within the framework of the post-2015 development agenda. The discussion was developed and led jointly by Civil Society and UN partners.

The discussion took place on the World We Want 2015 Website, which has hosted a series of joint UN- Civil Society “Global Thematic Consultations on the Post-2015 Development Agenda”² led by UNDG, including a year-long series of discussions on addressing inequalities in the post-2015 development agenda, led by UNICEF and UN Women³. This online discussion continues the series, and while migration was included in the Thematic Consultation on Population Dynamics, this discussion provided an opportunity to focus on the impact of migration on adolescents and youth, issues not extensively discussed in the Global Consultations.

Some Key Recommendations for the Post-2015 Development Agenda:

1. Enable migrant adolescents and youth, including the children of migrants, to access social protection services in countries of destination.
2. Strengthen social safety nets to ensure school attendance, health care and other basic services for children whose parents have migrated.
3. Strengthen efforts to combat xenophobia, racism and discrimination towards migrants and children whose parents have migrated.
4. Create safe environments for adolescents and youth affected by migration, including the most vulnerable, to enable their active participation in policy processes and ensure their views and experiences are considered when formulating the post-2015 development agenda.

5. Provide skills training and education, including in labour rights, for young migrants in countries of origin to enable them to find employment in countries of destination.

6. Include environmental change-induced migration in the post-2015 development agenda, national climate change adaptation plans and crisis management plans.

No Place to Call Home. Repatriation from Germany to Kosovo as seen and experienced by Roma, Ashkali and Egyptian children with the German Committee for UNICEF, August 2011
Country: Kosovo	Partner(s): UNICEF, Kosovo Health Foundation and UNICEF German Committee
Thematic Area(s): Data and research; Rights of migrants	Tags: Migration and health; Social cohesion and integration
Summary: These reports present the situation of the Roma and related groups – such as Ashkali and Egyptians in Kosovo, Sinti, Kale and Travelers. According to these reports, these groups remain among the most marginalized populations in Europe. They tend to suffer from widespread discrimination and systematic social exclusion. Although the pattern of social exclusion is part of a historic legacy, living conditions of many Roma in Central and Eastern Europe have worsened over the last two decades. Economic transformation resulted in the disappearance of many low-skilled jobs. Across the region, gaps between the Roma and majority populations, in terms of employment, quality of housing, educational achievement and health status, have grown dramatically. The reports have had some positive policy impacts. For instance, the governments of North Rhine Westphalia, Saxony-Anhalt and Bremen issued decrees taking into account the length of stay in Germany and the child's level of integration and schooling in decisions on residence titles. The decree issued in September 2010 by the minister of the interior of North Rhine Westphalia was of particular significance, as it explicitly instructed authorities to take the best interest of the child into primary consideration. This has been a core recommendation of UNICEF in last year's report. Another positive step in the right direction are the recent amendments to the Aufenthaltsgesetz passed by the Federal Parliament, making the extension of residence titles possible on the ground of a child's good integration and school record. Relevant decisions have also been made in Kosovo. The government established a Reintegration Fund in the past year, which earmarked 3.4 million Euros for reintegration assistance.

Title: Mexican Consular Registration Card (Matrícula Consular)
Country(ies): Mexico, United States	Partner(s):
Thematic Area(s): Diaspora; Governance of migration and coordination of dialogue; Strategies for addressing irregular migration and enabling regular migration	Tags: Capacity building; Diaspora empowerment and engagement; Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants
Summary: The objective of this card is to provide Mexican migrant workers in the United States with a document that can act as an identify card, thus facilitating access to services. An additional objective is to streamline assistance and lower remittance transfer costs. Since 1871 Mexican embassies and consulates in a have issued identification documents (matrícula consular) to their nationals abroad. In the United States, high security features were then added to these documents in 2002 in response to the US government's security concerns after September 11. Fifty Mexican consulates operate in the United States and provide documentation, legal and social assistance, and cultural services. Consulates also coordinate with local organizations, Mexican associations, and state and national authorities to educate Mexican immigrants on a range of issues, including safety and health in the workplace. The matrícula consular is an identify card, with a photograph and other security features, that attests that the bearer of the card is a national of Mexico living abroad. The card costs about US$ 29 and is valid for five years. In May 2003, the Treasury Department established regulations recognizing the cards as proof of identity for the purpose of opening a bank account. The cards are accepted for other community services as well, such as signing up for. It has been particularly useful for undocumented Mexican migrants in that it provides them with identification documents. In 2005, 118 banks in the United States accepted the matrícula consular as an alternative form of identification to open bank accounts. Increased access to banks has the additional benefit of reducing transfer costs of remittances to Mexico.

Thematic Area(s): Diaspora	Tags: Capacity building; Diaspora empowerment and engagement; Diaspora investment and entrepreneurship; Livelihood and job creation; Local development; Migration, trade and investment; Private sector and public private partnership; Skilled migration; Transfer of values, ideas knowledge and skills.
Summary: The SECO Start-up fund was opened in 1997 as a credit facility (i.e. loans are to be repaid) for green grass investments in high risk countries (where commercial loans are not available or extremely expensive). It was designed as an access to finance institution and was originally not thought of as a project for migrants. After many years of implementation, it was observed that - especially in the Balkans - a majority of successful investors using the credit facility were highly skilled migrants from the first or second generation who managed to maintain their relation with their country of origin while fully understanding the market and quality requirements of Swiss/European customers as well as accessing respective business networks. Thanks to their comparative advantage in their country of origin, many of the start-ups were successful and created thousands of jobs (estimation in 2012: 19'000). Finance Contact, the managers of the fund, are now increasingly present during diaspora and related business events. The idea is not to make migrants return to their countries. Some choose to return while others manage their business from Switzerland and/or commute. This instrument is not aimed at micro-enterprises, but at small and medium enterprises (SME).

Title: Support to the Swiss Chapter of the Nigerians in Diaspora Organisation Europe (NIDOE-Swiss) – Vocational training initiative
Country: Switzerland, Nigeria	Partner(s): Swiss Chapter of the Nigerians in Diaspora Organization Europe (NIDOE-Swiss); Technical College Yaba, (Lagos), Federal Science and Technical College, Yaba (Lagos); Lady Mechanic Initiative, Lekki (Lagos); Lagos State Technical College, Ikorodu (Lagos)
Thematic Area(s): Diaspora	Tags: capacity building, diaspora empowerment and engagement, diaspora investment and entrepreneurship, local development, remittances, transfer of values, ideas knowledge and skills.
Summary: In the framework of the Migration Partnership signed in 2011, Nigeria and Switzerland have both recognised the need to enable the diaspora to formulate and implement development projects. NIDOE-Swiss has an intrinsic motivation and substantial practical knowledge to contribute to development, but little institutional capacities and experiences. The Global Programme Migration and Development of SDC supports NIDOE-Swiss in strengthening its skills and expertise and thereby enables it to implement development projects in Nigeria. NIDOE-Swiss will implement a project funded by SDC to improve the vocational training of students and their employability in Nigeria. The organisation's knowledge and skills will contribute to the economic development in Nigeria.

Title: Tanzania: Burundi Naturalization, A model of Local Integration and durable Solutions for protracted refugee(2008). Refugee Protection and mixed migration The 10-point plan in action by UNHCR.
Country: Tanzania	Partner(s): UNHCR, other partners, donors, The government of Tanzania
Thematic Area(s): Diaspora; Policy coherence and mainstreaming	Tags: Policy coherence; Legal frameworks on migration
Summary: Naturalization of Burundian refugees was introduced by the government of Tanzania as a part of a comprehensive solution strategy. Burundian refugees who sought refuge and had been resident in Tanzania since the 1972 crisis in Burundi were given the option of either returning home or obtaining citizenship in Tanzania. This initiative, which was introduced in 2008 by the government of Tanzania, foresaw the implementation of a massive naturalization programme for 160, 000 Burundian refugees. The Naturalisation programme has been commended by the international community as a remarkable step in finding solutions for one of Africa's longest staying refugee populations

Title: Diaspora Engagement
Country: United States of America	Partner(s): The International diaspora Engagement Alliance (IdEA)
Thematic Area(s): Diaspora; Civil society and the private sector; Strategies of minimizing costs/maximizing human development	Tags: Capacity building; Diaspora empowerment and engagement; Diaspora investment and entrepreneurship; Local development
Summary: Recognizing the value of diaspora communities and their contributions to their local communities in the U.S. and their continued engagement with their countries of heritage, the U.S. Department of State's Office of Global Partnerships launched the International diaspora Engagement Alliance (IdEA). IdEA promotes and supports diaspora-centered initiatives in entrepreneurship, volunteerism, philanthropy, diplomacy, and social innovation in countries and regions of diaspora origin. IdEA is a non-partisan, non-profit organization that engages global diaspora communities, the private sector, civil society, and public institutions in collaborative efforts to support economic and social development. Furthermore, the IdEA partnership launched Diaspora Marketplaces, business plan competitions that encourage sustainable economic growth and employment by supporting U.S.-based diaspora entrepreneurs with innovative and high-impact ideas for start-up and established businesses in their regions of heritage. To date, IdEA has launched two African Diaspora Marketplaces, a Caribbean IdEA Marketplace, and recently wrapped up a Latin American IdEA Marketplace competition. Additionally, the U.S. Department of State recently launched an initiative called Networks of Diasporas for Engineers and Scientists (NODES), a partnership between the Department of State, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and the National Academy of Sciences. The goal of this group is "to connect diaspora scientists across boundaries by fostering knowledge networks; the sharing of best practices; the identification of capacity-building tools; and the creation of links between professional societies, universities, NGOs, and government agencies at home and abroad."

Title: Slavery Footprint
Country: United States of America	Partner(s): Department of State
Thematic Area(s): Strategies for addressing irregular migration and enabling regular migration	Tags: Addressing irregular migration
Summary: Through a grant from Department of State, the Slavery Footprint tool, a web- and mobile-based application, was developed to help more people around the world learn how their lifestyles and consumption habits can fuel the demand for forced labor and sex trafficking and, thereafter, make more informed purchasing decisions. The self-assessment tool, available at www.slaveryfootprint.org , is a unique effort to expand consumers' understanding of how their own actions can drive markets for human trafficking, in particular the demand for forced labor in supply chains, and calls consumers to take action. Over 1.4 million people have learned their slavery footprint and taken action.

Title: Corporate Social Responsibility
Country: United States of America	Partner(s): Public and Private Partnerships
Thematic Area(s): Civil society and the private sector	Tags: Local development; Private sector and public-private partnerships
Summary: Many examples of corporate social responsibility and public-private partnership have focused on reducing exploitation, particularly of migrants and their communities. For example, on January 16, 2014 Walmart announced that it joined forces with its Florida tomato suppliers and the Coalition of Immokalee Workers (CIW) to strengthen and expand the groundbreaking Fair Food Program. Tom Leech, senior vice president of Global Food Sourcing for Walmart said: "Walmart and our suppliers are committed to strong ethical sourcing standards and every day we work to help ensure the products we sell are produced in a way that provides fair treatment for workers in our supply chain." As agricultural work in the United States has a heavy migrant worker component to it, Walmart's program and others like it have a clear impact in promoting the rights and well-being of migrants and their communities.

Title: Protecting Procurement and Supply Chains
Country: United States of America	Partner(s): Public and Private Partnerships
Thematic Area(s): Civil society and the private sector; Policy coherence and mainstreaming		Tags: Policy coherence
Summary: Governments are large consumers, spending hundreds of billions of dollars each year on goods and services ranging from construction and weaponry to office supplies and technology equipment. As some of the world's largest employers, governments can have a major impact on eradicating slavery by employing best practices to reduce the risks that human beings will be trafficked or exploited to produce the goods and supply the labor needed by governments. Efforts to combat forced labor around the world will be most effective when the public and private sector, through complementary initiatives, put in place, monitor, and enforce clear policies and practices that prohibit human trafficking and the unscrupulous labor practices that facilitate it.

Title: U.S. Federal Contracting
Country: United States of America	Partner(s): Public and Private Partnerships
Thematic Area(s): Civil society and the private sector; Policy coherence and mainstreaming		Tags: Policy coherence
Summary: To strengthen the U.S. Government's existing policy prohibiting human trafficking in government contracting, President Obama has issued an Executive Order (13627) that expressly prohibits all federal contractors, subcontractors, and their employees from engaging in trafficking-related activities, such as charging employees recruitment fees, misrepresenting key terms and working conditions, and confiscating or otherwise denying employees access to their passports or identity documents. The Executive Order also requires compliance measures for large overseas contracts and subcontracts. For a subset of larger federal contracts (exceeding $500K) performed abroad, it mandates new and tailored compliance plans. Such plans must include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ An awareness program for employees about the anti-trafficking policy and penalties for violations; ○ A safe grievance mechanism; ○ A recruitment, wage, and housing plan; ○ Procedures to prevent and detect subcontractors, at any tier, from engaging in prohibited activities; and ○ Cooperation with audits, investigations, and other actions to ascertain compliance. Government agencies are now required to establish a process to identify industries and sectors that have a history of trafficking-related activities in an effort to enhance compliance on domestic contracts. Additionally, agencies have developed training for the federal acquisition workforce to better identify and monitor potential trafficking in U.S. government contracts.

Title: Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor Foreign Assistance
Country: United States of America	Partner(s): Human Rights and Democracy Fund
Thematic Area(s): Rights of migrants	Tags: Capacity building; Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants
Summary: We have also increased our attention to migrant empowerment via our programming, in collaboration with international and grassroots partners. We currently provide approximately $3.45 million in Human Rights and Democracy Funds to build the capacity of local labor and civil society organizations to advocate on behalf of migrants; to improve migrant workers' awareness of rights in the workplace, including freedom of association; and help migrant workers whose rights have been violated seek remediation and, as appropriate, safe and dignified return to their families.

Title: Agreements between Trade Unions in Countries of Origin and Destination on Protecting Migrant Workers' Rights
Country: Various countries/regions	Partner(s): ILO Bureau for Workers' Activities (ACTRAV), International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), regional and national trade union organizations
Thematic Area(s): Civil society and the private sector; Governance of migration and coordination of dialogue; Labour migration and mobility; Rights of migrants	Tags: Protection, empowerment and rights of migrants; Capacity building; Legal frameworks on migration
Summary: Together with the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and regional trade union organizations and with the support of national trade union centres from countries of origin of migrant workers and those in countries of destination, the ILO Bureau for Workers' Activities (ACTRAV) has developed a model "Trade Union Agreement on Migrant Workers' Rights", which aims to articulate the role of trade unions in both origin and destination countries in protecting migrant workers. The text of the agreement, which can be adapted to fit specific situations, contains key trade union principles, proposals for joint actions and campaigns and covers a wide range of practical suggestions for activities aimed at promoting the rights of both migrant and non-migrant workers. Such agreements between trade unions in origin and destination countries have been adopted in various parts of the world (e.g. Nepal-Republic of Korea, Armenia/Georgia-Russian Federation, Sri Lanka-Bahrain/Jordan/Kuwait, Moldova/Ukraine-Italy, Lao People's Democratic Republic-Thailand).
